Email response

Name Withheld 2

Dear OfCom,

After years of enduring blatantly skewed and distorted material on the BBC website, I endorse the views expressed here , which are summarised as

"The BBC cannot control how wars are fought, but it can control whether its journalism creates incentives for child suffering, whether information it knows to be false remains in the permanent historical record, and whether audiences are told when information reaching them was produced under coercive conditions."

High quality, balanced, fair and accurate reporting on the BBC website is vital to democratic processes not just in the UK but globally.

Please do everything you can to improve its quality, which has decayed almost beyond recognition over recent years – particularly with regard to its coverage of the conflict in the Middle East.

Your sincerely,

[redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted]