

The UK already has one massively funded public broadcaster - the BBC. There is no shortage of Internet content despite the lack of a quango funding it, and investment in internet start-ups and internet ideas of various levels of quality seems pretty high.

Most areas of business would like a quango to fund them to the tune of £50-100M. I don't see what this one would usefully achieve.