1. Applications received

- 1.1 Ofcom will not now accept any further applications to provide S-RSLs between 12 May and 16 June 2018 in the geographical areas listed below. We may, however, still be able to accept applications for broadcasts in other parts of the UK during this period.
- 1.2 As set out in Short Term RSLs: Guidance Notes for licence applicants and licensees when Ofcom receives a large number of S-RSL applications at the same time for the same purpose, dates and location, we will draw lots to decide between them.
- 1.3 From January 2018 we will assess the applications we have received for S-RSLs to broadcast between 12 May and 16 June 2018. For areas where a draw is necessary, we will publish a draw schedule detailing all affected applicants in due course. We intend to hold the draws by late March. However, we will only inform applicants of the outcome of the draw when technical checks have verified the availability of a suitable frequency. A recording of the draw, which will be held at Ofcom's London offices, will be posted on our website for applicants to view for a brief period. Applicants wishing to be present during the draw can contact Ofcom to arrange this.
- 1.4 Applicants are reminded that S-RSL application fees are not normally refundable. If an applicant decides to withdraw their application at any stage, we will not refund the fee.
- 1.5 The granting of any S-RSL is subject to the availability of a suitable frequency. Due to the general lack of suitable frequencies, particularly in major cities and towns, applicants should note that groups in the same region may be competing for frequencies with one another, even though the areas they wish to cover do not necessarily overlap. This may apply to some applications which appear at first glance to be in uncontested areas. In such cases, we may have to put applications into a draw to decide between them.
- 1.6 Applications have been received from the applicants listed below, for the areas listed below. This list does not imply any acceptance of the application on Ofcom's part – applications will only be formally accepted by Ofcom after we have undertaken checks on the application forms and have confirmed that we have received payment of the application fee. There may be further, more detailed checks on the draw winners before formal acceptance. Applicants who have not met the application criteria set out in the S-RSL Guidance Notes will be contacted during January 2018.

2. Application process for short-term RSLs during May and June 2018

- 2.1 Applicants wishing to broadcast a short-term radio service under a Short-term Restricted Service Licence ('SRSL') on any dates between Saturday 12 May and Saturday 16 June 2018 (inclusive) should apply during our application window opening on Monday 13 November 2017 and closing on Friday 17 November 2017.
- 2.2 In geographical locations where only one application is received, we may be able to offer a licence to that applicant in line with our 'first come, first served' policy. However, the religious festival of Ramadan falls within this period and, based on previous experience, Ofcom expects to receive a large number of applications to operate SRSL stations during May and June 2018. Consequently, in some places in the UK, due to the high demand for SRSL broadcasts and the limited number of FM frequencies available, we expect to have to allocate licences by way of a draw instead of our usual 'first come, first served' policy.
- 2.3 All prospective applicants should note the following:
- a) Only a complete, signed application form accompanied by a cheque for the application fee of £400 can be considered for a licence award or, if necessary, participation in a draw. The application fee will be banked in the Ofcom account before the draw takes place.
 - b) If an application is deemed incomplete (for example, it is missing proof of identification, or an appropriate support letter) then Ofcom may subsequently request the information if the application is for a non-contested area. However, if the area requires a draw due to the receipt of multiple applications, only complete applications will be forwarded to the draw process. Incomplete applications will be rejected and the £400 application fee returned.
 - c) Applications for a service linked to a religious event, such as Ramadan, must include a letter of support from the head of an appropriate local religious body or place of worship (see paragraph 27 of the SRSL guidance notes).
 - d) In addition to the £400 application fee, successful applicants will be required to pay two licence fees (one for a Broadcasting Act licence, and the other for a Wireless Telegraphy Act licence). We will not confirm frequencies or issue licences to successful applicants until the required fees have been paid.
 - e) No changes to the transmitter site identified in an application will be permitted, other than where a change is necessary due to an emergency (i.e. circumstances beyond the applicant's control).
 - f) All broadcasts on RSLs must comply with the Ofcom Broadcasting Code and other relevant Ofcom codes. In particular, for any broadcast charity appeals, the broadcaster needs to take reasonable steps to satisfy itself that the charity appeal organisation concerned can produce satisfactory evidence of charitable status, or, in the case of an emergency appeal, that a responsible public fund has been set up to deal with it. We may subsequently ask broadcasters for information about how much money was raised in any appeal, the recipient organisation and for evidence that all the funds raised have been used for charitable purposes.

Next steps

- 2.4 Ofcom intends to hold any required draws during March 2018 (see paragraphs 31 to 38 of the SRSL guidance notes for further details of the draw process). We will inform successful applicants of the draw result once technical checks have verified the availability of a suitable frequency.
- 2.5 Applicants are reminded that SRSL application fees are not normally refundable. Therefore, if an application is unsuccessful in a draw process, the application fee will not be refunded. Similarly, the fee will not be refunded if an applicant subsequently decides to withdraw their application.
- 2.6 Applications which are successful in the draw will remain subject to Ofcom's usual application assessment process, so applicants should note that success in the draw is not necessarily a guarantee of the award of a licence.
- 2.7 Any application for a licence to provide a service between Saturday 12 May and Saturday 16 June 2018 (inclusive) should be submitted between Monday 13th November and Friday 17 November 2017, using the SRSL application form.
- 2.8 Any application to broadcast in May or June 2018 that is received after the application window closes on 17 November 2017 can still be considered for a licence, but only if it is for a broadcast in an area for which we have not already received an application, and will be subject to frequency availability.
- 2.9 If you require any further details about this process, please send an email to: broadcast.licensing@ofcom.org.uk.
