

I don't want in future to find it more difficult to obtain wireless access to the internet when away from home. This is the likely outcome if would-be providers of such service, for example my local pub that presently does provide service, would become at risk of being punished for copyright violations of service users it knew nothing about, if it continued to provide service.

Secondly, I do not wish to be blamed for copyright violations I know nothing about, perpetrated by other people who access the internet via the router in my home, for example neighbours or guests in my home.
