

Yes.

We believe that Chorley FM has evolved over the years to become an important information point for the local Chorley community. From our experience of having a regular interview slot we have found that many people of all ages listen to the station and find our discussions interesting and informative. We offer services for people over 50 and have been contacted as a direct result of our interviews. Social isolation is a huge problem across the North West and being able to reach older people through our relationship with the station by providing information on how we can help people integrate into the community is imperative. Chorley has a very diverse demographic and we support the proposed commitment changes to allow the audience to gain useful information that will help them find out what is happening in their local community.
