
To whom it may concern

Audio description is an essential part of TV for people with a visual impairment. Without it I and many of my friends would find it virtually impossible to access much of the programmes on TV. Audio description is invaluable for filling in actions, expressions, scenery and much more that greatly enriches the entertainment value. We would prefer option 2 of the consultation to be implemented and would welcome, ideally, every programme to have audio description available. We understand that subtitles are available on almost every programme. Could this not be the same for AD in the future.
