Additional comments:

Just a general response, rather than answers to specific questions below. Perhaps the shake-up should be more radical and require the Post Office to offer a price regulated ‘Standard Class’; service which offers much the same standards currently provided by ‘Second Class’; mail plus various optional add-ons such as ‘Signed For’; deliveries - but with more monitoring to ensure that those standards are met and penalties if they are not - and allow the Post Office the commercial freedom to offer multiple ‘Premier Class’; offerings, the prices, terms and conditions of which are determined more by market demand rather than price control.
