

Additional comments:

Question 1:Do you agree that Ofcom should grant approval to Royal Mail for the Delivery to Neighbour service? If not please explain your answer. :

NO!

How many farm tracks are they going to go up to find someone not in the fields or sheds? My postie is intelligent enough to use his common sense in leaving parcels. Have some faith in your employees - though remembering urban posties, you'd be better off giving them lessons in putting things actually fully through letter boxes so that they don't get stolen.

And remembering urban living, how many people do you think will BE at home? I shouldn't imagine that they'd be too happy taking in parcels for the whole street. And I wouldn't trust some of my former neighbours further than I could throw them - would I be able to sue Royal Mail if something went missing?

Question 2:Are there other consequences following the roll out of the service across the UK that we have not included in our assessment? If so, please explain.:

How about doing your job and not expecting us to do it for you?

You've closed Post Offices, done away with second deliveries, put prices up stratospherically and yet you still can't run a Post Office even as well as it was some years ago, let alone in Victorian times? Let's face it, no one trusts any of the Post Office management any further than they can throw them. Leave the majority of your staff to get on with their jobs and stop jerking both them and the public around.

Question 3:Do you have any comments on the scope and wording of the proposed Notification and approval:

Spend more time actually trying to run a decent business instead of trying to work out how to cut it to shreds.