Information Services at Aberystwyth University support the response of JANET (UK). Fundamental points:
(1) we already have effective policies for reducing copyright infringement
(2) these would be frustrated if our institutions were classed as 'subscribers'
(3) education and research would be inhibited by such a classification
(4) logic, practicality, and effectiveness all indicate that our institutions should be classed as ISPs or communications providers
In summary, solutions appropriate to domestic situations should not be foisted on institutions, where they would not work well.

We disagree with the conclusions of paragraph 3.28 requiring proof of identity before access to the internet is permitted. For reasons of public policy for education, not to mention civil liberties in general, this is a deplorable suggestion, unauthorised by Parliament, which would actually inhibit copyright compliance.

Question 3.1: Do you agree that Copyright Owners should only be able to take advantage of the online copyright infringement procedures set out in the DEA and the Code where they have met their obligations under the Secretary of State?s Order under section 124 of the 2003 Act?
