Due Impartiality and Due Accuracy and Undue Prominence of Views and Opinions

Publication date: 22 March 2017
Section Five
Due Impartiality and Due Accuracy and Undue Prominence of Views and Opinions Guidance

General

1.1 This Guidance is provided to assist broadcasters in understanding how Ofcom will usually interpret and apply the Broadcasting Code. The Guidance to Section Five should be read in conjunction with Section Six: Elections and Referendums, and the accompanying Guidance to Section Six. However, Ofcom considers each case on its facts.

1.2 Where relevant, weblinks are provided to cases (already published by Ofcom) which broadcasters may find helpful when considering how to interpret the Code.

1.3 Different rules within Section Five apply to different Ofcom licensed services and to BBC UK television, radio and on-demand programme services\(^1\) as follows:

Meaning of "due impartiality":

"Due" is an important qualification to the concept of impartiality. Impartiality itself means not favouring one side over another. "Due" means adequate or appropriate to the subject and nature of the programme. So "due impartiality" does not mean an equal division of time has to be given to every view, or that every argument and every facet of every argument has to be represented. The approach to due impartiality may vary according to the nature of the subject, the type of programme and channel, the likely expectation of the audience as to content, and the extent to which the content and approach is signalled to the audience. Context, as defined in Section Two: Harm and Offence of the Code, is important.

Guidance

1.4 Central to the application of Section Five is the concept of “due impartiality”. Depending on the facts in each case, due impartiality may need to be applied in all programming genres, including cinema films shown on television, comedy programmes, or televised dramas. However, in reaching a decision whether due impartiality needs to be preserved in a particular case, broadcasters should have regard to the likely expectation of the audience as to the content, and all other relevant contextual factors. For example, audience expectations would not normally expect the same approach to due impartiality to be taken in an historical drama compared with a serious documentary on a controversial and contemporary issue.

1.5 If a service is broadcast outside the United Kingdom, this fact may be taken into account when considering the application of due impartiality. However, the due impartiality requirements of the Code still apply to such services.

1.6 It is an editorial matter for the broadcaster how due impartiality is preserved, as long as the Code is complied with.

Rules relating to due impartiality and due accuracy in news

Rule 5.1

News, in whatever form, must be reported with due accuracy and presented with due impartiality.

Guidance

1.7 Accuracy entails getting the facts right. In complying with the requirement to report news with ‘due accuracy’, broadcasters should refer to the clarification of ‘due’ set out in the meaning of ‘due impartiality’, as laid out above. For example, where a matter is of particular public interest, the requirement to present that matter with due accuracy will be correspondingly higher.

1.8 In terms of this section of the Code (i.e. the requirement for ‘due impartiality’ and ‘due accuracy’), news in whatever form would include news bulletins, news flashes and daily news magazine programmes. Just because material is broadcast on a ‘rolling news’ channel does not necessarily mean that the material would be characterised as ‘news’ content.

1.9 In accordance with a broadcaster’s right to freedom of expression, the broadcaster has the right to interpret news events as it sees fit, as long as it complies with the Code. However, broadcasters should take care before making any unequivocal interpretations or statements about contentious issues, which may be dependent on nuance and open to different interpretations e.g. statistical findings or ambiguous statements made by politicians.

1.10 Rule 5.1 is potentially applicable to any topic included in news programming, and not just matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy. There is no requirement on broadcasters to provide an alternative viewpoint in all news stories or all issues in the news. However, all news stories must be reported with due accuracy and presented with due impartiality i.e. impartiality adequate or appropriate to the subject.

1.11 Due impartiality in news might be achieved through broadcasting different viewpoints on a particular issue on successive days in a series of explicitly linked ‘special’ news reports which each separately focus on one particular viewpoint on a particular subject. Depending on the circumstances in each case, such an editorial approach might ensure compliance with Rule 5.1, as long as it was clearly signposted to the audience, in line with Rule 5.6 of the Code.

1.12 In reporting on particular news items, the broadcasters should take account of all relevant facts, including the nature of the coverage and whether there are varying viewpoints on a particular item. For example, if a news item includes criticism of individuals or organisations, then broadcasters should consider whether they need to reflect the viewpoints of the individuals or organisations being criticised, within their news output as appropriate and in a proportionate way and/or reflect any refusal to comment of that individual or organisation. Whether news is presented with due impartiality will depend on all the relevant circumstances.

1.13 In its research, Ofcom has consistently found that audiences say that impartiality and accuracy in broadcast news is important to them. For example, Ofcom’s 2015 Media Tracker survey\(^2\) found that 88% of all respondents considered it important that television news is impartial, with the corresponding figure for radio news being 80%. Ofcom research has found that audiences consider it important that television and radio news is accurate.

1.14 Ofcom research has also demonstrated that there are greater expectations for news channels that are perceived to be aimed at a UK audience than there are for channels with a global audience.

1.15 Broadcasters can criticise or support the actions of particular nation-states in their programming, as long as they, as appropriate, reflect alternative views on such matters.

1.16 Broadcasters should take care to report surveys and statistics in context.

1.17 Where a broadcaster attempts to seek alternative views, but these are not readily available (for example, an individual or organisation declines to give an interview or give comments), there are a range of editorial techniques for maintaining due impartiality. For example, broadcasters could: seek alternative viewpoints from a range of sources; summarise with due objectivity and in context the alternative viewpoints, for example, through interviewees expressing alternative views; make clear with appropriate frequency and prominence that a broadcaster has sought alternative views from particular individuals or organisations; and/or ensure that the views expressed in a news item are challenged critically by presenters and reporters within the programmes. Broadcasters must not assume prior knowledge on the part of the audience of particular alternative views. However, overall, it is an editorial matter for the broadcaster as to how it presents news with due impartiality.

1.18 When reporting the news, presenters and reporters employed by a broadcaster must take care that they present the news with due impartiality and maintain the editorial independence of the channel they represent.

Rule 5.2

Significant mistakes in news should normally be acknowledged and corrected on air quickly (or, in the case of BBC ODPS, corrected quickly). Corrections should be appropriately scheduled (or, in the case of BBC ODPS, appropriately signaled to viewers).

Rule 5.3

No politician may be used as a newsreader, interviewer or reporter in any news programmes unless, exceptionally, it is editorially justified. In that case, the political allegiance of that person must be made clear to the audience.

Guidance

1.20 The use of politicians as reporters or presenters in news programmes could be problematic in the context of the requirement for due impartiality. A politician is likely to include an elected representative e.g. an MP or councillor, a candidate, an applicant to be a candidate or a prospective candidate (that is a candidate for election who knows they have been chosen to represent a party at an election), an employee of a political party or an activist.
1.21 A previous Ofcom decision in this area is:

News, London Greek Radio:

Rules relating to special impartiality requirements: news and other programmes

General

1.22 The ‘special impartiality’ rules (Rules 5.4 to 5.13 inclusive) apply to national and international matters, although the impartiality due to a non-national matter may be less. To give an example, broadcasters are expected to apply impartiality rules to a subject such as the American Presidential Elections. For those Ofcom licensees who are not broadcasting to the United Kingdom, the impartiality requirements still apply but the amount due may be less depending on the subject matter and the original country of reception.

Matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy

Meaning of “matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy”:

Matters of political or industrial controversy are political or industrial issues on which politicians, industry and/or the media are in debate. Matters relating to current public policy need not be the subject of debate but relate to a policy under discussion or already decided by a local, regional or national government or by bodies mandated by those public bodies to make policy on their behalf, for example non-governmental organisations, relevant European institutions, etc.

Guidance

1.23 Whether a “matter of political or industrial controversy and matter relating to current public policy” is being dealt with in a programme will depend on a range of factors. Just because a ‘political’ or ‘policy’ matter is referred to in a programme, or broadcasters deal with particular matters that elicit strong emotions, does not mean that the special impartiality rules are engaged. Conversely, just because a number of individuals and institutions, or the majority of the audience to a service, share the same viewpoint on a contentious issue, does not necessarily mean that a matter is not, for example, a matter of political or industrial controversy.

1.24 There may be a range of instances where a programme would not necessarily be deemed to be dealing with a matter of political or industrial controversy or a matter relating to current public policy, including:

- where references to a political matter or policy is essentially descriptive and incidental to the main editorial premise for a programme, and where the programme does not include views or opinions on the merits of a particular political matter or policy;

- where references to political disputes and conflicts are used as descriptive backdrop to a historical drama; and ‘personal view’ testimony on particular matters included within factual programming.

1.25 In considering whether an issue is one of “political or industrial controversy” or has been broadly settled, broadcasters should consider relevant factors. These may include, as appropriate, independent reports commissioned by, for example, the UK Parliament and whether the issue has already been scientifically established and does not appear to be challenged by, for example, established political parties or other significant domestic or international scientific institutions. An example of an issue which Ofcom considered to be broadly settled is the scientific principles behind the theory of Anthropogenic Global Warming.

1.26 There is no requirement that there should be any political controversy in the UK’s Parliament about an issue for its treatment in a broadcast to be subject to Section Five. However, a matter can still be a “matter or current public policy” even if the UK Parliament has a settled policy on it.

Rule 5.4

Programmes in the services...must exclude all expressions of the views and opinions of the person providing the service on matters of political and industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy (unless that person is speaking in a legislative forum or in a court of law). Views and opinions relating to the provision of programme services are also excluded from this requirement.
Guidance

1.28 The person providing the service’ is a concept used in connection with the legal requirements for the licensing and compliance of broadcasting services. In this rule, it refers to the licensee, the company officers and those persons with an editorial responsibility for the service or part of the service rather than, for example, the programme presenter.

1.29 In considering programming under Rule 5.4, Ofcom will consider the available evidence and circumstances to ascertain what the views and opinions of the person providing the service could reasonably be held to be.

1.30 If a programme contributor, whom Ofcom deems to be a ‘provider of a service’, expresses a view on a matter of political or industrial controversy or a matter relating to current public policy within that service, there will be a breach of Rule 5.4 (unless that person is speaking in a legislative forum or in a court of law, or the view or opinion relates to the provision of the programme services themselves). This will be the case whether or not the programme contributor characterises their views on that matter as being a personal opinion, and as not being expressed on behalf of the licensed service.

The preservation of due impartiality

Rule 5.5

Due impartiality on matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy must be preserved on the part of any person providing a service... This may be achieved within a programme or over a series of programmes taken as a whole.

Guidance

1.32 Broadcasters must ensure due impartiality is maintained in any programme or section of a programme that deals with matters of political or industrial controversy or matters relating to current public policy. However, the preservation of due impartiality does not require a broadcaster to include every argument on a particular subject or to provide, in each case, a directly opposing argument to the one presented in the programme.
1.33 It will not always be necessary to present an opposing view which is at odds with the established view of the majority or inconsistent with established fact in order to preserve due impartiality. Further, whether or not due impartiality has been preserved will also be dependent on a range of other factors such as: the nature of the programme; the programme’s presentation of its argument; the transparency of its agenda; the audience it is aimed at, and what the audience’s expectations are.

1.34 It is important to note that the broadcasting of highly critical comments concerning the policies and actions of, for example, any one state or institution, is not in itself a breach of due impartiality. It is, in fact, essential that current affairs programmes are able to explore and examine issues and take a position even if that is highly critical. However, a broadcaster must maintain an adequate and appropriate level of impartiality in its presentation of matters of politically controversy. Depending on the specifics of the issue, it may be necessary, in order to fulfil the due impartiality requirements, that alternative viewpoints are broadcast.

1.35 Just because a contentious political issue is receiving little coverage within the media does not obviate the need for the broadcaster to provide alternative viewpoints on such an issue where appropriate.

1.36 Due impartiality will not be maintained merely by offering people or institutions likely to represent alternative viewpoints (for example, representatives of a foreign government) the opportunity to participate in programmes, who decline to do so. If a broadcaster cannot obtain, for example, an interview or statement laying out a particular viewpoint on a matter of political or industrial controversy or matter of current public policy, then the broadcaster must find other methods of ensuring that due impartiality is maintained. These might include some of the editorial techniques outlined in paragraph 1.37 below.

1.37 It is an editorial matter for the broadcaster as to how it maintains due impartiality. Where programmes handle, for example, controversial policy matters and where alternative views are not readily available, broadcasters might consider employing one or more of the following editorial techniques:

- interviewers could challenge more critically alternative viewpoints being expressed, for example, by programme guests or audience members, so as to ensure that programme participants are not permitted to promote their opinions in a way that potentially compromises the requirement for due impartiality;

- where an interviewee is expressing a particular viewpoint, interviewers could reflect alternative viewpoints through questions to that interviewee;

- alternative viewpoints could be summarised, with due objectivity and in context, within a programme;

- having available interviewees to express alternative views; or

- if alternative viewpoints cannot be obtained from particular institutions, governments or individuals, broadcasters could refer to public statements by such institutions, governments or individuals or such viewpoints could be expressed, for example, through presenters’ questions to interviewees.

1.38 In audience participation programmes where viewers or listeners are encouraged to telephone in to a programme, while broadcasters can encourage callers from different perspectives, it should not 'manufacture' them. However, whether or not viewers or listeners make calls, it is the responsibility of the broadcaster to ensure that due impartiality is maintained. Therefore, in the situation where, for example, a matter of political controversy is being covered in an audience participation programme and there are no views being expressed in opposition to the viewpoint being featured, broadcasters must have systems in place to ensure that due impartiality is maintained. For example, if a presenter or broadcaster is aware that they are receiving few audience interventions with an alternative point of view, they could consider some of the editorial techniques listed in paragraph 1.37 above.

Meaning of "series of programmes taken as a whole":

This means more than one programme in the same service, editorially linked, dealing with the same or related issues within an appropriate period and aimed at a like audience. A series can include, for example, a strand, or two programmes (such as a drama and a debate about the drama) or a 'cluster' or 'season' of programmes on the same subject.

Guidance

1.40 The expression ‘aimed at a like audience’ means that the linked programmes that make up a ‘series’ should be broadcast when it is likely that those who watched or listened to the first programme can choose to watch or listen to the second programme. In other words, if the first programme goes out at 20:00 it is most unlikely that it would be acceptable for a single linked ‘balancing’ programme to go out at 03:00. The broadcaster is not expected, however, to predict the audience make-up and try to achieve a similar audience for the second or subsequent programmes.

1.41 In applying due impartiality over editorially linked programmes, broadcasters should comply with Rule 5.6 (see below), concerning the signalling of editorially linked programming.

1.42 Ofcom' previous decisions on these issues include:

Ummah Talk and Politics and Beyond, Islam Channel:

Eyewitness, Ahlulbayt TV:

Rule 5.6

The broadcast of editorially linked programmes dealing with the same subject matter (as part of a series in which the broadcaster aims to achieve due impartiality) should normally be made clear to the audience on air.

Guidance

Location, Location, Location, Channel 4:

Rule 5.7

Views and facts must not be misrepresented. Views must also be presented with due weight over appropriate timeframes.

Rule 5.8

Any personal interest of a reporter or presenter, which would call into question the due impartiality of the programme, must be made clear to the audience.

Guidance

1.44 In understanding what is meant by ‘due weight’, it is useful to refer to the discussion of ‘due’ in the meaning of ‘due impartiality’.
Guidance Notes
Issue Six: 22 March 2017

1.45 Broadcasters must ensure that they are articulating alternative viewpoints in a duly objective manner. Programme content should not be skewed (e.g. through the editing of views) in a manner that undermines impartiality.

1.46 Ofcom would expect that, when dealing with matters covered by special impartiality requirements, broadcasters have put in place procedures so that reporters and presenters are at least aware of this rule and have an opportunity to make a declaration to the broadcaster. If the broadcaster could not reasonably have known of such an interest, then Ofcom would take that into account in the event of a case or complaint. It is not expected that presenters or reporters should make known personal and private medical matters to the public.

1.47 Previous Ofcom decisions in this area are:

Location, Location, Location, Channel 4:

Dispatches: The Court of Ken, Channel 4:

The Newspapers, Latest TV

Meaning of "personal view" and "authored":

"Personal view" programmes are programmes presenting a particular view or perspective. Personal view programmes can range from the outright expression of highly partial views, for example by a person who is a member of a lobby group and is campaigning on the subject, to the considered "authored" opinion of a journalist, commentator or academic, with professional expertise or a specialism in an area which enables her or him to express opinions which are not necessarily mainstream.

Rule 5.9

Presenters and reporters (with the exception of news presenters and reporters in news programmes), presenters of "personal view" or "authored" programmes or items, and chairs of discussion programmes may express their own views on matters of political or industrial controversy or matters relating to current public policy. However, alternative viewpoints must be adequately represented either in the programme, or in a series of programmes taken as a whole. Additionally, presenters must not use the advantage of regular appearances to promote their views in a way that compromises the requirement for due impartiality. Presenter phone-ins must encourage and must not exclude alternative views.

Guidance

1.48 Broadcasters are free to include ‘issue-led’ presenters in their programming, as long as they maintain due impartiality as appropriate. In clearly signalled ‘personal view’ programmes, many in the audience are comfortable with adjusting their expectations of due impartiality. However, in order to maintain due impartiality, alternative viewpoints should be adequately represented.

1.49 In audience participation programmes, for example, where viewers and listeners are encouraged to telephone, email or text in to the programme, broadcasters do not necessarily have to ensure an equal number of points of view are featured in any one programme or even across the series as a whole.

1.50 Broadcasters must ensure that if alternative views are included within a ‘personal view’ programme to maintain due impartiality, such views must not be included in a way that they are merely dismissed by the presenter and used as a further opportunity to put forward the presenter’s own views. For example, a presenter should not use alternative viewpoints, contrary to the presenter’s own, only in a dismissive way, and only as a means of punctuating the presenter’s own viewpoint.

1.51 If a presenter has strongly held views, and there are few, if any, alternative views expressed by the audience, then the broadcaster must take appropriate action and have systems in place to ensure that due impartiality is maintained in the same programme or over a series of programmes taken as a whole.

Rule 5.10

A personal view or authored programme or item must be clearly signalled to the audience at the outset. This is a minimum requirement and may not be sufficient in all circumstances. (Personality phone-in hosts on radio are exempted from this provision unless their personal view status is unclear.)

Guidance

1.53 The signalling of an item or programme as a personal view or authored is a matter for the broadcaster.

1.54 Broadcasters should be aware that complying with Rule 5.10 on its own does not mean that a broadcaster has preserved due impartiality.

Matters of major political or industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy

Meaning of "matters of major political or industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy":

These will vary according to events but are generally matters of political or industrial controversy or matters of current public policy which are of national, and often international, importance, or are of similar significance within a smaller broadcast area.
Rule 5.11:

In addition to the rules above, due impartiality must be preserved on matters of major political and industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy by the person providing a service…in each programme or in clearly linked and timely programmes.

Rule 5.12:

In dealing with matters of major political and industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy an appropriately wide range of significant views must be included and given due weight in each programme or in clearly linked and timely programmes. Views and facts must not be misrepresented.

Guidance

1.55 These additional rules are necessary because of the nature of the subject matter concerned: a matter of major political and industrial controversy or major matter relating to current public policy is of a significant level of importance and is likely to be of the moment.

1.56 As Rule 5.11 makes clear, if a programme is dealing with a matter of major political or industrial controversy and major matter relating to current public policy, broadcasters should be aware that Rules 5.4 to 5.10 still apply.

1.57 Rule 5.12 makes clear that if matters of major political or industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy are being dealt with then, firstly, an appropriately wide range of significant views must be included in the programme (or in clearly linked and timely programmes), and second, such views must be given due weight.

1.58 ‘Significant views’ could include the viewpoint of nation states whose policies are considered to be matters of major political and industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy.

1.59 As part of treating viewpoints with ‘due weight’ a broadcaster may debate and discuss such views. However, broadcasters must not dismiss or denigrate such viewpoints and include them in a programme simply as a means to put forward their own views.

1.60 Where programmes handle matters of major political or industrial controversy and major matters relating to current public policy, and where alternative views are not readily available, broadcasters might consider employing one or more of the editorial techniques listed in paragraph 1.37 above.

The prevention of undue prominence of views and opinions on matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy

Meaning of “undue prominence of views and opinions”:

Undue prominence is a significant imbalance of views aired within coverage of matters of political or industrial controversy or matters relating to current public policy.

Meaning of "programmes included in any service...taken as a whole":

Programmes included in any service taken as a whole means all programming on a service dealing with the same or related issues within an appropriate period.

Rule 5.13

Broadcasters should not give undue prominence to the views and opinions of particular persons or bodies on matters of political or industrial controversy and matters relating to current public policy in all the programmes included in any service...taken as a whole.

Guidance

1.62 Rule 5.13 applies only to local radio services (including community radio services), local digital sound programme services (including community digital sound programme services) and radio licensable content services.

1.63 Just because a broadcaster covered by Rule 5.13 includes only a single viewpoint on a matter of political or industrial controversy and matter relating to current public policy does not mean that there has been undue prominence given to that viewpoint on such matters. For Rule 5.13 to be breached there would have to have been a significant imbalance of views aired across all programming on a relevant radio service dealing with a matter of political or industrial controversy or matters relating to current public policy within an appropriate period. By contrast, national radio services, for example, are required to maintain due impartiality within a programme or more than one programme of the same series.

1.64 In judging whether there has been a significant imbalance of views by particular persons or bodies aired on a service, Ofcom will consider how often a particular viewpoint is included across all programming.
