Freedom of Information: Right to know request

Thank you for your request for information about different definitions of "impartiality" put to Ofcom Board members and Chairpersons.

We received this request on 13 June 2022 and have considered it under the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

Your request

You asked:

'Are there any different interpretations/definitions of "impartiality" that have been put to Ofcom Board members or Chairpersons in the past three and a half years and, if so, what are they? Any information, other than what we already know publicly ..., to any Board member(s)/Chair that tells them what "impartiality" is and/or when or whether it is "due" (a word that gives a great deal of latitude to impartiality's interpretation) or more on what is appropriate circumstances/situation/context etc. in which it then is, or if not appropriate, isn't, due.'

Our response

I have investigated your request and can confirm there have been no alternative definitions or interpretations of due impartiality put to Ofcom Board members other than that set out in the Broadcasting Code, as follows:

"Meaning of 'due impartiality'

'Due' is an important qualification to the concept of impartiality. Impartiality itself means not favouring one side over another. 'Due' means adequate or appropriate to the subject and nature of the programme. So 'due impartiality' does not mean an equal division of time has to be given to every view, or that every argument and every facet of every argument has to be represented. The approach to due impartiality may vary according to the nature of the subject, the type of programme and channel, the likely expectation of the audience as to content, and the extent to which the content and approach is signalled to the audience. Context, as defined in Section two: Harm and offence of the Code, is important”.

I hope this information is helpful. If you have any further queries, then please send them to information.requests@ofcom.org.uk quoting the reference number above in any future communications.

Yours sincerely,

Gloria Akinyemi
