

Annex 1 – The BBC Radio 5 Live news and current affairs quota

BBC Radio 5 Live broadcasts continuous news and live sports coverage, bringing major news stories and sports events to its listeners as they happen, and providing context through wide-ranging analysis and discussion. 5 Live is and will remain predominantly a news and current affairs station, that also broadcasts some sports. It will continue to report the most up-to-date live news coverage of the big stories in the UK and globally that affect our audience. 5 Live will continue to reflect the UK-wide audience as the only national speech station based in the North of England.

However, for the reasons set out below, we consider that it would be appropriate for 5 Live to have some additional flexibility regarding the Operating Licence quota that at least 75% of its output in each Financial Year must be news and current affairs programming.¹³

We are requesting that Ofcom reduce the quota from 75% to 70%. This minor change is fundamentally about giving us more flexibility in our approach. Through it, we will be more ambitious in our commitment to delivering a broader range of sports, and more live commentary on these sports than any other radio broadcaster. We will also hope to respond to audience needs around live sports coverage and sports analysis. We also consider that it will help 5 Live reach audiences that are currently less well served, in particular younger men, and those audiences from lower socio-economic groups.

Benefits of our proposal

Sports is of central cultural and social importance

Sports has a fundamentally important role in the cultural and social life of the nation. It is essential that there is coverage of a wide range of sports on free to air broadcasting. Its importance is recognised by broadcasting legislation, the Charter, the Agreement, the Operating Licence, other Ofcom regulation (e.g. the listed events regime), Ofcom's Small Screen: Big Debate report, and the recent Media Bill White Paper.

Therefore, while 5 Live is predominantly a news and current affairs channel, sport also performs an important role on the station. Sports coverage helps the BBC reach the underserved audience groups that Ofcom has raised concerns about over the first period of the Charter. Sports programming can help the BBC reach audiences that the BBC otherwise can struggle to reach, in particular, younger men and those from lower socio-economic backgrounds. These are some of the audiences that the BBC has identified as relatively less satisfied with BBC services in line with conditions 2.44 and 2.45 of the Operating Licence.¹⁴ Ofcom has encouraged the BBC to do more to serve these audiences in its annual reports on the BBC.¹⁵

Data from RAJAR (Q4 2021) shows that sport over-indexes for underserved audiences. Well-served audiences, spend more than three days a week listening to BBC audio and spend 2% of their time with the BBC listening to sport. In contrast, underserved audiences, spend 10% of their time with the BBC listening to sport but less than three days a week listening to BBC audio overall.

As set out in the table below, 5 Live sports output also over-indexes for younger 15-34 audience groups. Data from RAJAR (Q4 2021) shows that 5 Live’s sport offer significantly over-indexes for 15-34s compared to all audiences aged 15+, and they spend 43% of their listening hours with 5 Live listening to sports content compared to 29% for 15+ audiences overall.

Certain sports events and fixtures (for example, Premier League Football 2021-22; Champions League Football 2021-22; Euros 2020; and the Anthony Joshua vs Andy Ruiz Jr boxing match) over-index for C1C2D, 16-24 and 25-34 audiences relative to all 15+ audiences.

By slightly increasing our sports offering, we will therefore better reach these underserved audiences, including younger audiences and those in the C1C2D groups.

The flexibility will enable us to cover a broader range of sports more extensively

As noted above, this change in the quota is about giving us more flexibility. 5 Live already delivers a distinctive and high-quality sports offer. For example, we provide live commentary on a broader range of sports than any other radio broadcaster, including Premier League, Champions League and Women’s Super League football, international cricket, rugby and boxing. Last year we delivered live commentary across 43 different sports, against our commitment of 20 different sports.¹⁶

In having more flexibility in the news and current affairs output quota, we hope to offer both more extensive live commentary with deeper analysis, and to maintain our current broad sports offer. Our output will continue to be high quality and distinctive, and as noted above, we will focus our efforts on content that better reaches underserved audiences, such as C1C2D groups and younger audiences.

Where we do explore investing in new sports rights, we will look to strengthen our commitment towards providing a range of sports, and look do so in areas that drive value for underserved audiences. For example, we may look to improve our coverage of women's sports, sports that appeal to audiences outside of London (e.g. rugby league) and/or coverage of sporting events for disabled people.

Improved Licence Fee payer value

This change will improve Licence Fee payer value. As sports coverage is driven by sports rights and these rights need to be acquired in the packages offered by rightsholders, this flexibility will enable us to maximise the value from our investment in existing sports rights. For example, we will look to improve coverage of our live sporting events through even more commentary and analysis. This could include more distinctive 'wraparound content' for key live fixtures, using BBC Sport's unparalleled breadth and depth of knowledge to provide high-quality original output and develop the range of audiences served.

Other options include improving the prominence of live events by switching coverage from BBC Radio 5 Sports Extra to 5 Live where we see that there is audience demand. This could include Formula 1 qualifiers and early Masters rounds, as well as for growing women's sports such as women's cricket.

We will also look to better showcase our sports podcasts on 5 Live. Our own research shows that sports audio delivers the third highest number of activations (15%) on BBC Sounds over a year.¹⁷ Showcasing our sports podcasts on 5 Live will help raise awareness of the full sports offer available on Sounds and improve the return on investment.

Cyclical nature of sports and fluctuations in news stories

Sports coverage fluctuates significantly given the cyclical nature of some major sports events. For example, 2022 will include the Commonwealth Games and the Football World Cup; 2024 will include the Euros, Olympics, and Paralympics. In these high-sports years there is the standard annual schedule of sports, plus these major global events.

In these high-sports years, the 75% news and current affairs quota limits our ability to provide consistent and full coverage of all relevant events. For example, in those years where the Euros, Olympics and Paralympics are all being staged, we cannot comply with the condition and provide the coverage we would like of all these events. This means coverage of the more niche sports and sports events inevitably suffers.

¹⁶ Last year was unprecedented as due to the pandemic-related delay to the Tokyo 2020 Olympics it was the first time that the Olympics, Paralympics and Winter Olympics had been held during a single financial year

Equally, the news cycle also sees fluctuations. Major news stories and their timing can of course be unprecedented in nature. For instance, this financial year has already seen continued reporting of the Russian invasion of Ukraine, as well as major news stories such as former Prime Minister Boris Johnson's resignation and Queen Elizabeth II's death. At such times, we seek to prioritise reporting these major stories, and we are therefore in a better position to meet the 75% news and current affairs quota. However, at times, when there are not as many major news stories, the additional flexibility in the quota, constrains us from offering better value for audiences and skewing towards increased non-news programming.

The change will not have a significant market impact

The national sports radio market in the UK largely comprises of just the BBC (mainly 5 Live and 5 Sports Extra) and Wireless (talkSPORT, talkSPORT 2 and Virgin Radio). However, we consider that this modest change will not result in any significant market impact.

The BBC's proposal will only represent a modest change in the volume of sports coverage on 5 Live, with the station remaining predominantly news and current affairs.

Competition for sports listening is primarily driven by live coverage of the most popular sports and this coverage requires gaining the appropriate rights. The BBC is also not planning any increase in our audio sports rights budgets and will not be pursuing additional high-value rights. Rather the context of the BBC's wider financial challenges makes it likely that the sports rights budget for BBC Radio will be increasingly squeezed.

If we do consider acquiring new rights these would be for sports that would drive value for underserved audiences and strengthen our commitment to providing a range of sports. They are unlikely to be in areas where there is substantive competition for rights.

As this will represent only a small increase in sports coverage by the BBC and no increase in high-value sports rights, we consider this will not have a significant impact on rivals in sports radio.

News and current affairs will remain the primary focus of 5 Live

News and current affairs will remain the primary focus of 5 Live which will remain a service primarily for live and breaking news. We will continue to deliver on our remit through ambitious, distinctive and compelling output. A modest increase in sports content will not impair 5 Live's delivery of news.

We have no plans to make changes to our mid-week peak news programming, recognising listenership and audience appetite for news and current affairs programming at these times is high. Where we use the additional flexibility we will do so at times where there is less audience appetite for news and current affairs audio consumption.

As we have shown repeatedly in the past, when there is a breaking story we will prioritise flexibly shifting our programming in order to provide coverage of these pressing stories. For example:

- Following Queen Elizabeth II's death on 8 September, we removed all non-news programming throughout the weekend. On Saturday 10 September that meant 9 hours of news programmes were broadcast, replacing sport and entertainment shows. On Sunday 11 September, five hours of a usual sports schedule was replaced with news programmes, and the sports coverage that was aired, also included breaking news and news updates;
- When the former Chancellor, Rishi Sunak resigned from his role in July 2022, 5 Live was broadcasting the opening England match of the women's Euros. The station used half time in the match to broadcast news coverage instead of offering in depth match analysis. We similarly often use half time moments to cover major and breaking news stories;
- During the coronavirus pandemic, we provided the latest on the situation in the UK. At the start of the pandemic, 5 Live sport was taken off air, in order for the station to broadcast the Prime Minister's address to nation. Further, where necessary, we also shifted from our regular programming in order to cover the press conferences from Downing Street; and
- During the Brexit negotiations, 5 Live sport coverage was taken off air on a number of evenings for news coverage from Westminster, reporting on the voting for Theresa May's Brexit deal in the Houses of Parliament.

We will also utilise a portfolio approach to news across our speech stations

Across our BBC radio services, we will also be maintaining our news and current affairs output. In May this year, we announced our plans to reshape the senior commissioning team for BBC Radio and Music, in order to deliver maximum value for audiences. We announced a new portfolio approach in Music and Speech commissioning, with plans to work around the BBC's unique network of radio stations, recognising their individuality and huge popularity, whilst allowing teams to accelerate their digital first activities. We also announced plans to create more opportunities for collaboration around big ideas and find more ways to help listeners discover more from the BBC. We have already starting to implement this approach of working holistically across our services to provide news and current affairs output. For example:

- When 5 Live was broadcasting the opening match of the women's Euros, Radio 4 extended the hours of The World Tonight. On another occasion when Radio 4 was broadcasting non-news content they pointed audiences to 5 Live during every news bulletin during a recent breaking story; and
- Radio 4 has commissioned a new series of news programmes (Today Debates) that will go out at 8pm, at a time that 5 Live is broadcasting sports content.

This approach is supported by internal BBC Compass data which shows that there is an overlap between audiences consuming news and current affairs on BBC Radio 4 and BBC Radio 5 Live. When using the greater flexibility to offer sports programming, 5 Live will signpost to other BBC services, such as Radio 4, for news and current affairs, and our data suggests that audiences are willing to switch to these other BBC radio services.

We will also continue to demonstrate our commitment to news and current affairs more broadly, including through our extensive digital offer, which now includes an 'always on' digital offer including live coverage via the BBC's News app.

Annex 2 – BBC Radio 2’s live music quota

Under the current Operating Licence, BBC Radio 2 is required to broadcast 260 hours of live music each Financial Year. This condition has been in place unchanged since 2008 – first in the BBC Trust Service Licence for Radio 2 and then it was rolled over into the first Operating Licence in October 2017 in line with the requirements of Schedule 2 of the Agreement. We think this needs to be looked at again as it is impacting our ability to deliver audience value, particularly when we are operating under significant financial constraints. That said, we remain committed to providing distinctive Radio 2 live content which our audiences highly value as detailed below.

This condition has always been met through a combination of ‘new’ live music (i.e. happening in real time or the first run of specially recorded live music) and repeated live music (i.e. archive recordings of live concerts or sessions). Of the 260 hours of live music in 2021/22, 192 hours (74%) were repeats and 68 hours (26%) were new live music. This is the inevitable result of a fixed output quota, the high cost of live music, and the BBC’s financial pressures. In real terms, by 2021/22 Radio 2’s budget had declined by 14% since the first Operating Licence was set in 2017. Given the terms of the recent Licence Fee settlement and the current levels of inflation, the financial constraints will be even greater in the future.

Radio 2 is committed to bringing audiences the best and most distinctive live music, and in doing so supporting the creative economies across the UK. However, we believe that this public value and distinctiveness is delivered by the genuinely live or specially recorded first-run music, and not by the repeated material. The current condition leads to the BBC having to schedule high-cost, low audience value repeats of recorded concerts to meet the current quota. This consumes budget and airtime that could be used for more distinctive, higher impact programming delivering greater audience value. Maintaining the current condition will inevitably force Radio 2 to further increase the proportion of repeated material to the detriment of new live music.

Therefore, our preference would be that Ofcom treat live music in the same way as other genres and impose a transparency condition rather than a quota. Under this proposal, we would set out our exciting plans for live music in the forthcoming year in our Annual Plan and report on the delivery and impact of these plans as part of our annual reporting.

If Ofcom considers that a specific quota is required, we consider that this should apply to the distinctive and high public value programming, i.e. the genuinely live or specially recorded music programming. This could be accomplished by keeping the current approach but defining live music as only applying to the higher value programming and rebasing the hours requirement accordingly (and allowing for future budgetary constraints). If Ofcom were to follow this approach, we would propose that the quota for new / first-run live music be set at 55 hours each Financial Year. This would reflect our current level of output for genuinely live or specially recorded music, while providing flexibility in anticipation of the inevitable impact of the current level of inflation and our funding settlement.

We set out our evidence for these changes in more detail below.

Our commitment to genuinely distinctive and high-value live music on BBC Radio 2

We remain committed to delivering live music on Radio 2. Radio 2 continues to showcase live music with new and archive performances across the year, including coverage from key festivals and events. In 2022, we will have broadcast 142 sessions or 68 hours of new live music. In the last year our distinctive new live music offer has included:

- Sunday Night is Music Night: 5-6 new recordings of the world's longest-running live orchestral music radio programme, featuring the BBC Concert Orchestra live from across the UK; amounting to approximately 10-12 hours.
- Radio 2 in concert: 2 specially recorded concerts from global artists (in 2022: Duran Duran and Coldplay) from the BBC Radio Theatre, amounting to about two hours.
- Sessions/Piano Rooms: Live music recordings from well-known and emerging music artists – both mainstream and specialist – in sessions across the breadth of our programming. Plus in February this year, we celebrated ‘Piano Room Month’ featuring 20 of pop’s best-loved and new artists, including Tears For Fears, David Gray, Jack Savoretti, Natalie Imbruglia, Joy Crookes and JP Cooper alongside the BBC Concert Orchestra at the BBC’s Maida Vale Studios.
- Radio 2 Country/Country 2 Country festival: Live coverage from the Country to Country Festival in London. We also deliver ten sessions each Financial Year, amounting to around ten hours of live music sessions programming.
- Glastonbury/Eurovision: We also seek to bring the best coverage to our audiences from Glastonbury and Eurovision as well as providing live music programming from these world-famous events across our portfolio of pop music networks. We deliver ten sessions each Financial Year, amounting to around ten hours of live music programming.
- Ad Hoc live programming: We also continue to deliver ad hoc live music programming across the Financial Year.

Live music continues to be valued among Radio 2 audiences, particularly among the station’s strategic target of audiences aged 34-54. Our own research from May 2021 shows a high level of awareness of Radio 2’s live music programming among regular listeners, particularly among audiences aged 34-54. Awareness and consumption is particularly high for Radio 2 in Hyde Park and Radio 2 in Concert. Further, 41% of those who listen to Radio 2 live, agreed strongly that the service is great for live music, and 40% agreed strongly that the service had regular live music sessions. Radio 2 listeners aged 35-54 also showed higher levels of agreement levels than the regular Radio 2 listeners for statements around “Feels like it is for people like me”, “I hear live music on Radio 2 that I do not hear elsewhere”, and “I specifically tune in to Radio 2 when it broadcasts live music performances”. We will continue to respond to audience needs, and deliver distinctive programming that they value and cannot listen to elsewhere.

Our focus should be on high-quality, innovative and distinctive live and specially recorded music – however, these are expensive

The costs associated with live music programming are significant. Recording live music is inherently more complicated and therefore costly than DJ-led shows (where costs are driven by on-air talent, relatively simple production support and utilisation of studio facilities). By contrast, live music programming costs involve:

- Cost of performers, e.g. BBC Concert Orchestra;
- Venue hire;
- Technical costs, e.g. outside broadcast costs;
- Larger number of production staff; and
- Sometimes visualisation spend.

For example, new live music sessions and concerts are the most expensive shows per broadcast hour on Radio 2, sometimes more than four times expensive than the next most expensive Radio 2 show. Even repeating live music is expensive, with some repeats being more expensive than all but the 11 most expensive shows on Radio 2.

We are committed to investing in brilliant, utterly distinctive live music events, but the reality is that there are only so many we can afford. The 142 sessions of new live music shows generate good listening and audience response, whilst the repeats receive lower levels of listening, and are often among the least listened to shows on Radio 2.

Additionally due to music rights issues with live / special recordings, catch-up on Sounds is typically limited to one month, reducing the value that can be gained from extended on-demand listening.

As can be seen from above and the table below, the current condition leads to the BBC investing too much to schedule high-cost, low audience value repeats to meet the current quota. This consumes budget and airtime that could be used for more distinctive, higher impact programming delivering greater audience value. Given the current financial conditions, if the structure and level of this quota is retained we will inevitably have to further reduce the volume of new live music we commission and the proportion of repeated lower-value content will have to increase.

Changing this approach would benefit audiences and increase public value and distinctiveness

Amending the quota will enable Radio 2 to prioritise genuinely impactful and distinctive new live music content. The change would support Radio 2 in offering more live music content that audiences cannot hear anywhere else, and that complements our other output. It would release funds that could be used to develop and invest more in live music sessions.

We are committed to continuing to programme more high-impact new, live music sessions. As noted above, our preference would be that Ofcom impose a transparency condition, replacing the current live music quota. Under this proposal, we would set out our plans for live music in the forthcoming year in our Annual Plan and report on the delivery and impact of these plans as part of our annual reporting. If Ofcom were to retain a quota, we would recommend that it be set at 55 hours of genuinely live or specially recorded music each Financial Year. Within these 55 hours, we will continue to broadcast innovative and high-quality live sessions such as this year's Piano Room month, which saw 20 of pop's best-loved artists perform a new song, a classic and a cover accompanied by the BBC Concert Orchestra. These are performances that would not exist without the investment and inspiration of Radio 2, and are of significant benefit to listeners, artists and the recording industry.

We will also continue to deliver on Radio 2 In Concert sessions, showcasing specially recorded music from global artists from the BBC Radio Theatre. We are committed to continue showcasing coverage from special live music events, including Glastonbury, Eurovision, and the Country to Country and Country Music Association festivals. We will also offer a range of additional live music sessions, prioritising content that is genuinely impactful, innovative and distinctive.

It is also likely that we will still broadcast some repeats of specially recorded concerts. However, by clearly defining the live music quota as relating to music that is genuinely new live and specially recorded, we will have the flexibility to deliver repeats that deliver real audience value, rather than including repeats in the schedule purely in order to meet the 260 hours quota in its current form. For example, we would plan to broadcast repeat live music sessions or specially recorded concerts to commemorate particular events, including those of cultural significance, religious festivals and notable birthdays or deaths. This will likely vary in volume year on year.

Given the financial constraints and costs described above it is clear that not all these 260 hours would be filled by live or specially recorded music programming. However, it is essential to note that all of Radio 2's other programming is also inherently distinctive, as we demonstrated in 2021/22 when:

- Radio 2 broadcast 15,621 unique tracks (all hours) compared to an average of 2,730 across 11 relevant commercial stations and 8,879 between 6am and 7pm compared to a commercial average of 1,845 in the same time slot.
- Radio 2 had a low overlap with songs played on commercial radio, i.e. about 10% in peak listening time.
- 51% of music in daytime from UK acts (quota: 40%) and 24% from new and emerging (quota: 20%).
- Radio 2 broadcast more than 1,200 hours of specialist music, significantly above its quota.
- Radio 2 also continued to provide more news and current affairs than any comparable radio station and significantly exceeded its quotas for arts programming, documentaries and religious output.

In scheduling the slots made available by reducing repeated 'live' music, Radio 2 will remain committed to prioritising creativity, breadth of genres and distinctiveness in its output. We will continue to broadcast a unique mix of music and speech programmes covering a diverse mix of live pop and rock, documentaries and religious output and run social action campaigns. In our music offering, we will continue to showcase UK acts, new and emerging UK artists and broadcast a broader range of music than comparable commercial radio stations. As such, Radio 2 will remain an utterly diverse and distinctive radio service.

Annex 3 – Programmes of a national and regional interest

Over the past two years the BBC has made a number of announcements about its strategy that will have an impact on the output related to the quotas for programmes of a national and regional interest. These announcements include Tim Davie’s introductory speech as Director-General¹⁸, our The BBC Across the UK strategy¹⁹, the Director-General’s recent speech on A digital-first BBC,²⁰ and our Annual Plans.²¹ All these announcements are consistent with the core priorities the Director-General set out in September 2020 to deliver great value for audiences, i.e. impartiality, high-quality content, online, and commercial growth.

With regard to programming in the devolved nations and English regions, we have committed to rebalancing our output across the UK as never before, and spending more in the devolved nations and outside of London. For the first time in our history, the clear majority of our UK-wide TV will be made across the UK and not in London. We have set a new target of at least 60% of network TV commissions by spend to be made across the UK (outside London), which we would reach sustainably by the end of the Charter. This will benefit the creative sector across the UK and support the independent production community

As part of this, we will grow our portrayal and representation of audiences across the UK. Over the next three years, over a hundred of our new and returning scripted titles will portray the lives and communities of audiences outside London, of which at least 20 will reflect Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland. We will also double the number of co-commissions between our Network and Nations teams across Factual, Drama and Comedy. We will track how much of our content delivers portrayal for our audiences.

Consistent with our strategy for high-quality, high-impact content, our goal is bigger, even more ambitious shows – keeping a very strong sense of locality but also able to work beyond borders delivering distinctive diverse content as set out in our public purposes 3 and 4.

With regard to news output, we will reshape our local services to be fit for the digital world – increasing the impact of our journalism online, and putting compelling local storytelling at the heart of iPlayer, Sounds and News, with a multimedia BBC presence in over 40 towns and cities. To strike a better balance between broadcast and freeing up money to invest online, we have proposed to end our dedicated TV bulletins from Oxford and Cambridge – merging these services with South Today and Look East. Similarly, to enhance our investigative journalism across England we will create a new network of journalists to focus on original storytelling rooted in our communities across England. This means that the next series of We are England – this autumn – will be the final one.

Currently the Operating Licence sets UK-wide quotas for:

¹⁸ Tim Davie’s introductory speech as Director-General, 3 September 2020.

¹⁹ The BBC Across the UK, March 2021.

²⁰ A digital-first BBC, May 2022.

²¹ BBC Annual Plans.

- 5,909 hours of programmes of national or regional interest on BBC One and Two, of which 557 hours must be non-news in peak and 179 hours non-news in times adjacent to peak; and
- 4,300 hours of the 5,909 hours must be news of national or regional interest on BBC One, of which 2,100 must be in peak viewing time.

It is important to note that these quotas are set on a cumulative basis, i.e. by summing all the national and regional programmes across 18 devolved nations and English regions.

Our strategy and published proposals will require changes to all these elements of the Operating Licence. Had Ofcom not been reviewing the Operating Licence, we would have made a formal request for a change to the quotas in order to implement these proposals. Below we set out the detail of our proposals.

News of a national or regional interest

There are three types of changes we are making for our national and regional news output: some small reductions in output; rationalising the English regions; and some minor scheduling changes.

Small reductions in regional and national TV news output

We have reduced some local news output on BBC One where that enabled an improved overall news offer and no meaningful impact on local provision. Decisions on the length and frequency of local news bulletins are taken jointly by the Content division, the News division and BBC Nations.

During the pandemic (from 20 March 2020 to 21 June 2021), we increased the length of the 10.30pm local news bulletin by 4 minutes, to 11 minutes Monday to Friday. We then reverted to the original length of 7 minutes.

We took this decision to reduce the overlap between the news on BBC One (including the local news) and Newsnight on BBC Two to maximise the audience impact of our most important news and current affairs programming across BBC One and BBC Two between 10pm and 11.10pm. Our view was that this improved audience offer justified the small reduction in local news minutes.

While the event-driven performance of news makes direct like-for-like analysis difficult, we have examined the performance of the 10.30pm local news bulletin in 2021 and 2022 using data from BARB. We can identify the increase and fall in time spent associated with the lengthening and shortening of the bulletin; however, all other metrics – reach, audience size and share – are in line with general trends for linear TV viewing or stable.

The Breakfast opts were dropped during the pandemic as we managed the impact on our own staff at this time with the need to protect higher value local news output, e.g. the 6.30pm programmes. Following this, BBC Breakfast decided to drop the 7.57am local bulletin for the audience reasons set out below. There were six local bulletins throughout Breakfast, one every 30 minutes (at approx. 6.27am, 6.57am, 7.27am, 7.57am, 8.27am and 9.05am). Audience feedback showed that audiences found this repetitive. The average Breakfast viewer watches for 48 minutes, meaning most viewers got the same content at least twice in that time. In addition, Breakfast were doing longer in-depth interviews with politicians around 7.30am. Dropping the 7.57am bulletin allowed them to do that and continue to give space to other content so there was a broader mix of news, features, sport and weather at the key viewing hours (i.e. between 7.15am and 8.45am). Breakfast continues to have five local bulletins, which is more than any other public service broadcaster, both in terms of regularity and duration.

Even with this small reduction, viewing of the local breakfast bulletins has remained in line with trends for reach, audience size and share.

Collectively these changes have reduced our output of news of a national or regional interest by about 390 hours per year. However, it is important to note that this means only 5.5 fewer minutes of local news per day.

Rationalisation of English regions

In May 2022, we announced our intention to close the Oxford and Cambridge local news opts and merge them with South Today and *Look East*²² respectively. Oxford and Cambridge are both local news opts that already share some programming with a wider area, and are amongst the smallest of our local news locations – both in relation to population covered and the level of viewing. As we set out at the time, these changes will free up money to invest in local online news.

While neither the Agreement nor the Operating Licence specify the number of separate regions, the existing quota is based on the current cumulative level of opts. These changes will lead to no reduction in the volume of news available to viewers at home, who will instead receive news from a slightly broader region than previously. That is, news in Cambridgeshire will now be included in Look East and news from Oxfordshire in South Today. Collectively, these changes will reduce the total volume of local news broadcast by the BBC by about 260 hours per year (of which about 190 hours in Peak Viewing Time) but will not impact on our audiences' experience of the important coverage from these areas.

Scheduling changes

In addition we have made a small number of scheduling changes that have an impact on the distribution of programmes between peak and off-peak. For example, in late February 2022 we amended the running order of the 10.30pm news slot. Previously the running order was UK news, local news, UK weather, local weather. We decided it would be better for audiences if the UK weather followed the UK news, and the local weather the local news. This coincided with the small reduction in the length of the bulletin.

The change in this running order means that the local news bulletin now starts at 10.30pm rather than 10.25pm, and therefore falls outside Peak Viewing Time. However, it is fundamentally the same content offer, with the local news merely a few minutes later. This reduces BBC News in Peak Viewing Time by 155 hours, but at no loss to audiences' experience of our local news offer.

²² Following the changes Look East will cover Cambridge, Essex, Norfolk and Suffolk and South Today will cover Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Oxfordshire, West Sussex, much of Dorset and parts of Berkshire, Surrey and Wiltshire.

As noted above, having analysed BARB data, we have seen no adverse reaction from audiences in terms of reach, audience size, share or time spent with this bulletin following the changes.

Cumulative impact of our news changes

Cumulatively these changes will reduce BBC One's output of news of a national or regional interest by about 650 hours annually in all hours and by about 450 hours in peak (of which about 200 hours relates to the closure of the separate Cambridge and Oxford opts and about 250 hours to the schedule change of the late bulletin from 10.25pm to 10.30pm). However, it is important to note that from a viewer perspective this is only a reduction of 5-6 minutes per day and under our overall local proposals they will have a better local digital offer which will provide them with more value.

Regional and national non-news programmes

The Operating Licence requires that the non-news quotas are set for Peak Viewing Time (6pm-10.30pm) and at times immediately preceding or following Peak Viewing Time (Peak Adjacent).

There are three types of change we are making for our national and regional non-news output: increasing investment in more high-impact content; enhancing our investigative current affairs journalism in England; and some minor scheduling changes.

We note that Ofcom has recommended to Government that the requirements in the Agreement to set quotas for non-news programmes of a regional or national interest in Peak Viewing Time and Peak Adjacent should be removed. We agree with this recommendation. This requirement is arbitrary and prevents the BBC from scheduling programmes in the interest of audiences. It is also – given the increased use of BBC iPlayer – in line with Ofcom's approach to the BBC as a portfolio across broadcast and digital.

It is also important to note that while all our non-news hours contribute to the total quota for programmes of a national or regional interest, only some of them are covered by the Peak Viewing Time and Peak Adjacent non-news quotas. In 2021, the BBC broadcast 1,378 hours of non-news programmes of a national or regional interest, of which:

- 442 hours (32%) were in Peak Viewing Time;
- 291 hours (21%) were in Peak Adjacent; and
- 644 hours (47%) were outside these times, largely in Daytime.

These daytime hours contain some of the non-news programmes with the highest public value, such as 348 hours of live sports (of which 63% were in daytime) or 380 hours of current affairs programmes (of which 75% were in daytime).²³

²³ In 2021, the BBC England current affairs strand Inside Out was off-air and its replacement We are England had not begun. Therefore, given our plans for current affairs in England our total current affairs hours are likely to be slightly higher than this in future years.

Additionally, although the BBC Scotland channel is not an opt and does not count towards these quotas, in 2021 it broadcast 1,675 hours of non-news programmes for Scottish audiences, of which 78% were in Peak Viewing Time or Peak Adjacent.

Increasing investment in more high impact content

As noted above, and as set out in our Across the UK strategy, we have committed to rebalancing our output across the UK, with the clear majority of our UK-wide TV being made across the UK and not in London. We consider that representation and portrayal of audiences across the UK will be best served by these plans, and – consistent with our strategy for high-quality, high-impact content – through the commissioning of a smaller volume of bigger, even more ambitious shows with a very strong sense of locality but with much greater appeal beyond the borders of the Nation or region within which they were commissioned. Examples of this would include Keeping Faith (Carmarthenshire), The Control Room (Glasgow), Angels of the North (Tyneside), and The Responder (Liverpool). This will also provide wider portrayal of that Nation or region to the whole of the UK. As well as appearing in prime schedule slots on BBC One these high-impact hours will feature much more prominently in BBC iPlayer. As these programmes will be broadcast UK-wide on BBC One or Two we will not necessarily also run them on opts.

The corollary of this is that we will need to reduce lower value, lower impact programming. This will either be through decommissioning underperforming programmes, commissioning fewer episodes per year of existing titles or not commissioning as many one-off programmes.

However, it is important to note that our planned investment required to commission these high-impact ‘Across the UK’ programmes on network tariffs will, on the basis of our current plans exceed the savings from the reduction in lower value, lower impact programming. As such this will be a net benefit to local production sectors.

Moving to this strategy would involve a reduction of about 200 fewer hours of non-news programmes of a national or regional interest per year, although many of these programmes will still be made but will be broadcast on network TV.

Enhancing investigative current affairs journalism in England

We plan for the next series of We Are England – this autumn – to be the final one. Instead, we will create a new network of investigative journalists (11 teams based in newsrooms across England) to focus on original storytelling rooted in our communities across England – increasing our investment in local current affairs investigative journalism by more than 20%. More broadly, we will focus on high impact content, putting compelling local storytelling at the heart of iPlayer. These teams will deliver around six stories a month that will appear first on our online services and also deliver versions of the stories for our local TV news programmes and radio services. In addition, a central team would develop stories, some from the 11 current affairs teams and some of their own, into 20- 25 half hour programmes for linear TV and iPlayer.

In 2022 We Are England will account for approximately 55 hours of our annual non-news programming in England.

The total output of the new teams will significantly exceed the hours of English current affairs provided by We Are England, although with some of this embedded in other existing programmes. The unique programmes produced by the new local current affairs teams will create:

- about 20-25 standalone half-hour programmes for linear TV and iPlayer, i.e. approximately 10-12 hours per year.
- About 80 to 100 hours of English local current affairs embedded in other existing programmes such as the 6.30pm programmes.

We will also continue to produce a large volume of current affairs outside of peak, but of importance to audiences, including Sunday Politics.

The net effect on the non-news peak quota is a reduction of approximately 50 hours per year. We consider that the enhancement of our English local current affairs described above justifies this change.

Scheduling changes

Given the peak and adjacent to peak requirements of the quotas, our performance against these quotas is highly sensitive to the scheduling of content. This is particularly true given the small volumes of programming per region covered by these quotas, e.g. the 557 hour peak quota is about 11 hours per week across all our regional variations of BBC One and BBC Two while the 179 hour peak-adjacent quota is about 3.5 hours per week across all our regional variations.

The levels of these quotas relate to historic broadcast patterns and specific programmes or programme blocks. As the market context has changed, with the increased importance of on-demand viewing and other changes in viewing behaviour, we need to take decisions to schedule programmes at the times when they will deliver the most audience value. We consider that audiences would be better served if some long-running programmes were rescheduled, e.g. to daytime or after peak viewing time rather than peak or peak-adjacent times. However, we are currently constrained from making such changes.

Our current plans would involve about 50 to 60 hours of peak regional or national non-news programming moving to other parts of the schedule. However, we consider that Ofcom should set the quota at a level that gives us flexibility in scheduling content in the best interests of the audience.

Cumulative impact of our non-news changes

Cumulatively these changes will reduce BBC One and Two's output of non-news programming of a national or regional interest by about 300 hours annually. However, 200 of these hours relate to our investment in high-impact content that will deliver brilliant representation and portrayal from across the UK on network TV; 50 hours relate to our investment in current affairs investigative journalism in England which will provide more coverage of local stories on network TV; and 50 hours relate to already planned scheduling changes that will not reduce the volume of hours but only their broadcast time.

We will retain a breadth of genre across our non-news programmes of a regional or national interest. Other than the improvements to our current affairs programming in England described above, we have no plans to change our current affairs offer in the devolved nations. We also have no plans to reduce our local sports coverage (future negotiations on sports rights permitting), indigenous language or education programmes. We will continue to broadcast a range of comedy, drama, religious and factual programmes of a regional or national interest. Our changes will offer greater value to audiences, and the change in the quotas will enable us to prioritise high quality content and deliver more local investigative journalism across the UK.

Our proposals for the Operating Licence

In order to implement the BBC’s publicly stated strategy set out in Across the UK of creating more high-impact content from the Nations and English regions; support our shift to digital; and enhance English investigative current affairs journalism, we require changes to the current quotas for programmes of a national or regional interest.

We therefore request that Ofcom reconsider the levels at which the quotas on programming for the nations and regions are set, such that there is greater flexibility to support our plans, and deliver better value for all audiences in the nations and regions. We set out below, our proposals for the levels at which we consider the quotas should be set. In developing these proposals we have taken into account our plans set out above and our current level of delivery, rather than just the levels of the current quotas.

Figure 4: Summary of proposed changes to quotas for programmes of a national or regional interest

	Current quotas (hrs)	Proposed quotas (hrs)	Rationale for the change
Programming of a national or regional interest on BBC One and Two	5,909	5,000	Cumulative effect of changes below
News programming of national or regional interest on BBC One	4,300	3,900	Closing Oxford and Cambridge opts * Removing 7.57am breakfast and shortening 10.30pm bulletins
News programming of national or regional interest throughout the day at Peak Viewing Time on BBC One	2,100	1,700	Closing Oxford and Cambridge opts * Scheduling change of 10.30pm local news *
Non-news programming of national or regional interest provided at Peak Viewing Time on BBC One and Two	557	200	High-impact content Closing We Are England Scheduling changes*
Non-news regional programming of national or regional interest providing adjacent to Peak Viewing Time on BBC One and Two	179	150	Flexibility required given other potential changes to scheduling

* These do not impact the volume of content available to viewers in a single region/nation.
