

The copyright laws need serious attention. The media need to embrace digital ways of working. None of this can be fixed by an ill thought out digital economy act.

If it isn't sorted there is a serious threat to consumers, and that is what ofcom is supposed to protect us against. The digital economy act is rubbish, and needs re writing before the internet is off limits.

The threat to wifi in public places is serious. The lawyers are going to make a fortune, and innocent people will be harassed to protect an obsolete business model. Ofcom must step in and protect the people from this foolishness.
