

Wifi providers shouldn't be held liable for the behaviour of those using their wifi. Each person should be responsible for the use that they themselves make of an Internet access and not a third party. Instituting this kind of principle will harm innocent people (those who are made responsible for something they didn't do) as well as feed a wave of censorship and surveillance on behalf of the wifi providers (so as to protect themselves from the implications of the law).