

I read on the BBC News website that there will be a £20 fee to appeal against any accusation, which I find disgusting and morally wrong.

It's supposed to be "innocent until proven guilty", not "guilty until you pay for the opportunity to prove you're innocent".

ACS Law were forced out of business for the scare mongering tactics of their "pay up or else" scheme. This fee for appealing makes their illegal business conduct suddenly appear fair.

Reject this bill just as ACTA was rejected. In fact reject all bills being funded through governments by the copyright/media industry. It's disgusting that businesses are able to manipulate and create laws, from their own pockets; for their own pockets.
