

As someone who has worked in venues, and has been involved in digital events I feel strongly that ensuring parties can make wi-fi provision as needed is an essential part of a digital economy. The UK is already a long way behind other countries in wi-fi access availability and this severely limits the effectiveness of the new digital tools and information sources that both government and private parties are producing. The liability on wi-fi providers in this bill is unreasonably heavy, and will lead to many small providers to shut down.