

The act as it stands could be used to penalise wi-fi providers for the actions of some of their users. This would discourage institutions from providing public wi-fi, a very useful service. As such, I believe that wi-fi providers should not be subject to the provisions of the act.