

Dear Madam.

I oppose the loss of Radio Devon. I am a volunteer driver and I have taken a lady to the hospital who is blind. When I have brought her home I normally make her a cup of tea, and she told me without her radio [Radio Devon] she would be lost because of the local information she gets keeps her in contact with local issues. When the TV went over to digital we were told there should be no problem especially if we bought a top box. My TV is 5 years old and the digital receiver is built into the set. The reception keeps breaking up and although I have a new Ariel I am told I need a filter [£30]. So why not stay with something that has a proven track record? Not let us forget that I am an able person but there are many that are not i.e the blind Lady how will she cope if the problems that exist even now with the TV affect her radio, she is not able to complain because without my granddaughter informing me I would not know.

Regards,

John Moore.
