I just wonder why there is so much talk and action about copyright infringement, whilst on the other hand those same companies are free to put region coding on every dvd produced so in effect control the open market.

They manipulate prices this way and nothing seems to be done against that, it looks like it is accepted as being normal?

When will we see some action against region coding of DVD's? In Australia they already decided it is illegal, so why not here? Is that because the governments here have no knowledge of this digital age and believe everything the companies tell them? Like saying the region coding and HDCP is to prevent copying.....we all know that HDCP does not protect against piracy as someone just copies the whole DVD/CD including the protection and it will play without problem. It is there because HDCP includes region coding, so DVD player manufacturers have no option to include region coding, or else they won't be able to make players. What a load of bull is the copyright infringement while the film industry manipulates and prevents free trade without even one word of warning.....ridiculous.
