

I am visually impaired and registered blind. I was registered in 2004 after retiring early on health grounds due to failing sight.

Now I am retired I listen to talking books, newspapers and magazines a great deal. I also watch television wearing binocular glasses which enables me to see about half the screen. I watch programmes about wildlife and countryside mainly. However I watch detective series some serials and need Audio description on these programmes, especially when the filming is darkened.

I urge you to consider increasing audio description for me, my visually impaired friends and also for the elderly, who are often suffering failing sight or waiting cataract operations and rely on television for their main entertainment.

I would be grateful if you would consider my request and put Audio description on all digital channels.
