

Having just heard about the RNIB campaign regarding audio description, I would like to add my plea for the service to be extended. I am registered blind but have some central vision and now having a digital TV which enables me to receive audio description, appreciate the difference this makes to my understanding and enjoyment of programmes.

In the past I have tried to watch programmes without audio description and at the end have missed some vital action or movement on the screen which has left me confused and frustrated at not understanding what has happened during the visual only meaning of the programme.

Of the three suggested options for future digital programmes I would support the third option "increase to 20 per cent on only 10 channels (the public service broadcasters - i.e. all BBC channels, ITV1, C4, Five and S4C)"
