Whatever else is done, MW and LW stations must remain. I live in a relatively rural place, but even when not at home I use MW and LW to pick up BBC channels that I want to listen to. They are about the only constants around the UK.

They only require simple radios - LOW POWER radios and this is important in portable and personal kit.

As for FM, you should not get rid of this either. The tiny portable radios that use tiny amounts of power give an excellent service - I am listening to one now at my desk that is no bigger than a tube of chewing gum and we need to keep that choice.
