

Response from:
Responding on behalf of:

William Bryan
Self

hello good aftrnoon,

just read that latest paper on regulation of voice services on broadband first of all why should there be a charge for making a call via the net when you are already paying for the use of broadband afterall there are programs like "instant messenger, ICQ" that already allow you to speak to someone over the PC with the aid of a microphone so it is not realistic for a company to charge for a call when it can be done already for free Secondly the use of 999 should be made available for all no matter what i firmly belive it is a basic right for someone to be ale to contact the emergancy services wether by phone fax or semiphore to deny someone the help they may need could result in injury or death and this could lead to action from the members from the persons family

yours
w bryan